

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE.

THE purpose of this enlarged and revised edition of the "Supplementary Composition" is in part the same as that of the original volume; namely, to provide a series of concise and systematic grammatical tests for students who have completed the work of some standard composition book. The Grammatical Introduction and Part I (Isolated Sentences) are designed to meet this need.

The division of Part I into exercises is one of convenience merely. The real units are the six sections into which the exercises are grouped, the student being given in each section an opportunity to illustrate, at least once, all the points outlined in the Grammatical Introduction. The six sections, therefore, provide six separate and complete examinations on the essential principles of Latin syntax. The order in which the principles occur varies from section to section, as does also the guise in which they appear, the aim being to throw the student upon his own responsibility as much as possible, and to lead him to recognize the constructions when and wherever found. If, as he finishes one section, he be required to master the points on which he has failed, the quality of his work should improve in the succeeding sections.

The sentences which make up the exercises of Part I are in general based closely upon the orations and philosophical works of Cicero. Where it has seemed necessary, a reference to the Grammatical Introduction has been given. The suggestions of the footnotes on points of vocabulary should be followed, for the principle to be illustrated sometimes turns upon the use of the word suggested.

Part II, which contains forty exercises in connected discourse, is the distinctly new feature of the present volume. These exercises are so arranged as to give a coherent account of the life of Catiline, beginning with his birth in 108 and running on to his death in 62. The writer has observed that the average student brings to college very hazy and incorrect notions regarding the conspiracy of Catiline, and it is hoped that Part II will, among other things, help to remedy this state of affairs. The account of Catiline's life here given is drawn from the various original sources, and is therefore not based upon any particular author or text. At the same time, the vocabulary is largely the old familiar one of Cicero's orations.

In their grammatical content the exercises of Part II are designed to provide a helpful preparation for the composition work offered in the larger colleges and universities during the freshman year. This general plan has found instant favor with the Latin teachers to whom it has been broached, and it is hoped that it may prove equally acceptable to those to whom it is now for the first time presented.

With the addition of these exercises in continuous narrative, this manual will meet a variety of needs. If a strict grammatical review is all that is desired, the six sections of Part I may be used. On the other hand, a class strong in grammar might with profit confine its attention to the continuous discourse of Part II. Or again, since each section of Part I is complete in itself, one or two sections may be used as a rapid grammatical review, the rest of the year being spent on the work of Part II.

I would here again express my obligation to Professor C. E. Bennett of Cornell for his suggestions regarding the Grammatical Introduction made when the book first appeared. In the work of revision I have found very helpful the suggestions of friends who have used the earlier edition, and for these grateful acknowledgment is here made.

GRAMMATICAL INTRODUCTION.

SYNTAX OF THE CASES.

[In the Exercises, reference is made to the Grammatical Introduction according to the marginal figures at the right.]

I. Accusative Case.

1. Extent of Time and Space. (1)

This construction occurs also with the participle nātus in stating a person's age.

B. 181; A. 423-425; G. 334 ff.; H. 417.

2. Double Accusative. (2)

With verbs of teaching (docēre), asking and demanding (rogāre, poscere), and concealing (cēlāre). In the passive, the accusative of the person becomes the subject, and the accusative of the thing is retained. Note, however, that instead of a second accusative, petere takes ab, and quaerere ab, dē, or ex, and the ablative of the person. This prepositional construction occurs also with poscere, postulāre, and flāgitāre.

B. 178; A. 396; G. 339; H. 411.

3. Accusative of Result Produced (in its use as Cognate Accusative). (3)

Here there are two important varieties; the accusative may repeat the verb idea, e.g. tūtam vītam vivere, or it may be a colorless pronoun or adjective which gains its specific meaning from the verb, e.g. multa errāre, 'to make many mistakes.'

B. 176. 2 and 4; A. 390 and c; G. 333;
H. 409.

4. Accusative of Exclamation. (4)

B. 183; A. 397. d; G. 343. 1; H. 421.

II. Dative Case.

1. Indirect Object.

(a) With transitive verbs. (5)

B. 187. I; A. 362; G. 345; H. 424.

(b) With intransitive verbs. (6)

Such as are translated 'to favor, help, please,' etc. But some verbs so translated take the accusative, notably iuvāre, adiuvāre, laedere, and dēlectāre.

B. 187. II. a and n.; A. 367; G. 346 and n.
3; H. 426.

(a) Impersonal construction in the passive, and dative retained. (7)

B. 187. II. b; A. 372; G. 346. r. 1; H. 426. 3.

(c) With verbs compounded with ad, ante, con, etc. (8)

These may be either transitive (as antepōnere), or intransitive (as subvenire). Note, however, that some such compounds (as cōnservāre) cannot take an indirect object; to apply the rule correctly it is necessary to know the verbs individually.

B. 187. III; A. 370 and b; G. 347, and cf. 331; H. 429.

2. Dative of Reference. (9)
B. 188. I; A. 376; G. 350 ff.; H. 425. 2.
- (a) With verbs expressing separation. (10)
The dative regularly refers to a person rather than to a thing.
B. 188. 2. d; A. 381; G. 347. R. 5; H. 429. 2.
3. Dative of Possessor. (11)
B. 190; A. 373; G. 349; H. 430.
4. Dative of the Agent. (12)
Used regularly with the gerundive; sometimes with the compound tenses of the passive voice.
B. 189; A. 374-375; G. 354-355; H. 431.
- (a) Direct agency expressed also by the ablative with ab. (13)
B. 216; A. 405; G. 401; H. 468.
- (b) Intermediate agency expressed by the accusative with per, or by a genitive or possessive with operā. (14)
A. 405. b; G. 401; H. 468. 3.
5. Dative of Service and Purpose. (15)
This dative is usually the singular of an abstract noun, and is often accompanied by a dative of the person.
B. 191; A. 382; G. 356; H. 433.
6. Dative with adjectives denoting fitness, nearness, likeness, etc. (16)
B. 192; A. 384; G. 359; H. 434.

III. Genitive Case.

1. Genitive with Nouns.

(a) Possessive Genitive.

( $\alpha$ ) Meus, tuus, etc., used instead of the possessive genitive of personal and reflexive pronouns. (17)

A. 343. a; G. 362. R. 1; H. 440. 1. N. 2.

( $\beta$ ) Possessive genitive in the predicate when the subject of the sentence is an infinitive. (18)

B. 198. 3; A. 343. c; G. 366. R. 2; H. 439. 5.

(b) Genitive of Quality or Characteristic. (19)

Requires a modifier, and may stand in the predicate. It usually denotes permanent and essential characteristics, and is used always in references to number, measure, time, and space.

B. 203. 1 and 2; A. 345; G. 365; H. 440. 3.

(c) Genitive of the Whole (Partitive Genitive). (20)

B. 201; A. 346; G. 367; H. 441.

( $\alpha$ ) Nostrum and vestrum, genitives of the whole; nostrī and vestrī, meī, tui, sui, objective genitives. (21)

B. 242. 2; A. 143. b and c; G. 364. R. and N. 2; H. 175. 2.

2. Genitive with Adjectives. (22)

Mostly objective; sometimes of reference (specification).

B. 204; A. 349; G. 374; H. 450.

(a) With similis. (23)

Genitive used commonly when the reference is to living objects; both genitive and dative of inanimate things.

B. 204. 3; A. 385. c. 2; G. 359. n. 4; H. 435.

4. n.

3. Genitive with Verbs.

(a) Genitive of Value and Price. (24)

With verbs of buying the use is restricted to tanti, quantā, plūris, and minōris. Other expressions of price are in the ablative. But with verbs of valuing more genitives are used, as parvi, māgni, etc.

B. 203. 3 and 4; A. 417 and c; G. 379;

H. 448. 1.

(b) With verbs of remembering and forgetting. (25)

(a) Personal and reflexive pronouns regularly in genitive.

(β) Other references to persons in genitive with oblivisci; in the accusative with meminisse, except when used in the sense 'be mindful of.'

(γ) References to things in either genitive or accusative; but neuter pronouns regularly in the accusative.

B. 206; A. 350; G. 376; H. 454.

(c) With verbs of judicial action. (26)

The ablative, too, is used of the penalty; regularly when this is a fine of definite amount.

B. 208; A. 352, 353. 1; G. 378; H. 456.

- (d) With impersonal verbs (miseret, etc.). (27)

B. 209; A. 354. b; G. 377; H. 457.

- (e) With interest (and rēfert). (28)

Referring to the first or second person, either verb is used with meā, tuā, etc. So also with the reflexive suā; but in other references to the third person interest is used with the genitive.

B. 211; A. 355; G. 381; H. 449.

IV. Ablative Case.

1. Ablative of Separation. (29)

(α) Verbs of freeing, depriving, or lacking, usually without a preposition.

(β) Other verbs may be used with ab, dē, or ex; regularly so when the ablative denotes a person, and often when the verb is compounded with ab, dē, dis-, ex-, or sē-.

B. 214; A. 400–402; G. 390; H. 461.

2. Ablative of Source. (30)

B. 215; A. 403; cf. G. 395; H. 467.

3. Ablative with a comparative. (31)

Allowed when the first term of the comparison is a nominative or accusative, and required in sweeping negations and questions equivalent thereto. With other cases than the nominative and accusative the quam-construction must be used.

B. 217; A. 406; G. 398; H. 471.

4. Ablative of Accompaniment. (32)

Cum is regularly used with this ablative, but may be omitted in military phrases when the noun is modified by some adjective other than a numeral.

B. 222; A. 413; G. 392; H. 473. 1.

5. Ablative of Quality or Characteristic. (33)

Requires a modifier. Often not to be distinguished in meaning from the corresponding use of the genitive; but employed regularly in references to bodily characteristics, and preferred when the modifier is pār or any adjective in -is.

B. 224; A. 415; G. 400; H. 473. 2.

6. Ablative of Manner and of Attendant Circumstance. (34)

Cum is required if the noun has no attribute; otherwise it is optional. 'Manner' is differentiated from 'Attendant Circumstance' by the fact that it is regularly restricted to abstract words, e.g. celeritate, virtute, etc.

B. 220-221; A. 412; G. 399; H. 473. 3.

7. Ablative of Cause. (35)

B. 219; A. 404; G. 408; H. 475.

(a) With gaudere, laetārī, maerere, etc. (36)

B. 219. 1; A. 431; G. 408; H. 475.

8. Ablative of Means. (37)

B. 218; A. 409; G. 401; H. 476.

(a) With ūtor, fruor, etc. (38)

B. 218. 1; A. 410 and n.; G. 407; H. 477. I.

V. Motion to and from towns and small islands; also domus and rūs.

1. Limit of Motion. (52)

'Into the neighborhood of' may be expressed by ad and the accusative.

B. 182; A. 427. 2, 428. a; G. 337; H. 418-419.

2. Motion From. (53)

B. 229. 1; A. 427. 1; G. 391; H. 462 and 4.

SYNTAX OF THE VERB.

I. Subjunctive in Independent Sentences.

1. Non-interrogative.

(a) Volitive Subjunctive (in its hortatory, jussive, and concessive uses). (54)

B. 274-275; A. 439; G. 263; H. 559.

(b) Optative Subjunctive. (55)

The present tense refers to the future; the imperfect expresses a regret that something is or is not, the pluperfect, that it was or was not; the latter tenses require utinam.

B. 279; A. 441; G. 260-261; H. 558.

(c) Potential Subjunctive. (56)

Note especially this use in verbs of perception whose subject is the indefinite second singular.

B. 280; A. 445 ff.; G. 257-258; H. 552-556.

2. Interrogative.

- (a) In deliberative questions. (57)

B. 277; A. 444; G. 265; H. 559. 4.

- (b) In repudiating or rejecting questions.* (58)

These reject the will or thought of another concerning the speaker's action; less often the speaker rejects such will or thought directed upon some one else.

B. 277; A. 444. a; G. 259, 558; H. 559. 5.

II. Prohibitions. (59)(a) nōli and nōlūe with infinitive.(β) cavē (nē) and subjunctive.

B. 276; A. 450; G. 271; H. 561.

III. Substantive Clauses.*1. Of Result. (60)

With verbs of bringing to pass, happening, and following.

B. 297; A. 568; G. 553; H. 571.

2. Developed from the Volitive.

- (a) With verbs of hindering, preventing, etc. (61)

The conjunctions are quīn, quōminus, and nē. Quīn is used only after negative sentences or questions equivalent thereto.

B. 295. 3 A. 558 and b; G. 549, 554-555;
H. 568. 8, 595. 2, 596. 2.

* Some grammars make 58 a subordinate class of 57.

- (b) With verbs of admonishing, commanding, etc. (Substantive Purpose). (62 a)

B. 295; A. 563; G. 546; H. 565.

3. Developed from the Optative.

- (a) With verbs of wishing and desiring (Substantive Purpose). (62 b)

B. 296. 1; A. 563; G. 546; H. 565.

- (b) With verbs of fearing. (63)

Nē nōn (rather than ut) is used after negative expressions and questions equivalent thereto.

B. 296. 2; A. 564; G. 550; H. 567.

IV. Purpose and Result.

1. Purpose.

- (a) Ut, nē, quō, and quī with the subjunctive. (64)

Quō is to be chosen when there is a comparative in the purpose clause. The present and the imperfect are the tenses regularly employed in purpose clauses.

B. 282; A. 529–531; G. 543. 3, 545; H. 568.

- (b) Supine in -um with verbs of motion. (65)

B. 340. 1; A. 509; G. 435; H. 633.

- (c) Gerundive and Gerund. (66)

Accusative with ad, and the genitive with causā or grātiā. The gerundive of transitive verbs should be used, the gerund of intransitive.

B. 338–339; A. 533; G. 544. R. 2; H. 626. 3, 628.

---

2. Result. (67)

Ut, ut nōn, and quī with the subjunctive.

B. 284; A. 536-537; G. 552; H. 570.

V. Conditional Sentences.

1. Nothing implied as to the reality of the supposed case (Simple or Logical Conditions). (68)

B. 302; A. 515-516; G. 595; H. 574.

(a) Subjunctive of the present or perfect in protasis when the subject of the verb is the indefinite second singular. (69)

B. 302. 2; A. 518. a; G. 595. R. 3; H. 578. 2.

2. Supposed case represented as contingent (Less Vivid Future or Ideal Conditions). (70)

These differ from those under (1) as 'If I should do' differs from 'If I (shall) do' in English.

B. 303; A. 516. 2; G. 596; H. 576.

3. Supposed case represented as contrary to fact (Unreal Conditions). (71)

B. 304; A. 517; G. 597; H. 579.

VI. Concessive Clauses.

1. Conceding a fact.

(a) Quamquam, etsi, etc., with indicative. (72)

B. 309. 2; A. 527. c and d; G. 604-605; H. 586. I.

- (b) Cum with subjunctive. (73)

B. 309. 3; A. 549; G. 587; H. 598.

2. Conceding a possibility.

- (a) Quamvis, licet, ut, and ne with subjunctive. (74)

B. 309. 1 and 4; A. 527. a and b; G. 606–608; H. 586. II.

VII. Causal Constructions.

1. Cum with subjunctive. (75)

B. 286. 2; A. 549; G. 586; H. 598.

2. Quod, quia, and quoniam with indicative and subjunctive. (76)

The indicative should be used when the speaker is willing to vouch for the reason, whatever the source of his information. If he wishes to disclaim responsibility for the truth of the statement, the subjunctive is to be used. The subjunctive clause may be represented in English by 'because, as he said,' 'because, as it was said,' etc.

B. 286. 1; A. 540; G. 539 ff.; H. 588. I and II.

VIII. Time Relations.

1. Postquam, ubi, and ut with indicative. (77)

Note that in this group antecedence of action is not as carefully indicated as in some other Latin constructions.

B. 287; A. 543; G. 561–563; H. 602.

2. Cum with indicative and subjunctive. (78)

Theoretically, in references to the past, the indicative is to be used when the temporal clause defines the time of the action of the verb of the main clause, e.g. '(It was) when I was walking down the street (that) I met him,' the subjunctive, on the other hand, being used in clauses that merely describe the circumstances of the action of the main clause. But in practice the subjunctive is the prevailing form, and it is often used where there is little descriptive force.

B. 288; A. 545-546; G. 580, 585; H. 600.

3. Antequam and priusquam with indicative and subjunctive. (79)

The use of the subjunctive indicates suspense on the part of the subject of the verb of the main clause; e.g. effugere cōnātus est, priusquam Rōmānt venīrent. The indicative is used of events regarded by the narrator as historical, or certain to come to pass; accordingly, the substitution of vēnērunt for venīrent in the above sentence would alter the meaning to 'before the Romans arrived, he made an effort to escape.'

B. 291 ff.; A. 550-551; G. 574-577; H. 605.

4. Dum, dōnec, and quoad with subjunctive. (80)

This mood is used when suspense or design is involved.

B. 293. III. 2; A. 553; G. 572; H. 603. II. 2.

IX. Indirect Discourse.

1. Infinitive and subject accusative. (81)

B. 314; A. 580; G. 650; H. 642.

2. Tenses of the infinitive. (82)
 B. 270; A. 584; G. 530; H. 617 ff.
3. Subjunctive in subordinate clauses. (83)
 B. 314; A. 580; G. 650; H. 643.
4. Conditional sentences in indirect discourse. (84)
 In the apodoses of contrary to fact conditional sentences the imperfect and the pluperfect subjunctive alike are represented by the form -urus fuisse.
 B. 319 ff.; A. 589; G. 656 ff.; H. 646-648.

X. Miscellaneous.

1. Conditional Clauses of Comparison. (85)
 Introduced by quasi, tamquam (si), etc. Though the conditions are usually contrary to fact, Latin generally chooses the present and perfect subjunctive when the sequence is primary.
 B. 307; A. 524; G. 602; H. 584.
2. Proviso with dum, dummodo, and modo. (86)
 B. 310; A. 528; G. 573; H. 587.
3. Quin with subjunctive after various negative expressions and questions equivalent thereto. (87)
 (a) In characteristic and result clauses.
 (β) With nōn dubitāre (in the sense of 'doubt').

PART II
CONNECTED DISCOURSE

SUMMARY OF THE EVENTS OF CATILINE'S LIFE.

B.C.

108. Birth.
82. Sulla's officer.
68. Praetor.
67. Governor of Africa.
66. Returned to Rome, and desired to stand for the consulship at a special late election. Was prevented from so doing by an impending suit for extortion in Africa. About December 5 helped to organize a plan (the First Conspiracy) to murder the successful candidates.
65. The plan (originally for January 1) was discovered, and postponed to February 5. It miscarried at this later date, and was given up. Catiline desired this year also to stand for the consulship, but was not acquitted on the extortion charge early enough.
64. Ran for the consulship against Cicero and others. About June 1 began to organize the Second Conspiracy, partly to help toward his election. Was defeated at the polls.
63. Brought to trial for murder committed under Sulla; was acquitted. Was again a candidate for the consulship. October 21, the dēcrētum ultimum passed. Catiline was again defeated at the polls. November 6, the meeting at Laeca's house. November 8, the first of Cicero's speeches against Catiline, the latter leaving the city that night to join Manlius. Military operations in Etruria.
62. Death near Pistoria.

THE STORY OF CATILINE.

EXERCISE 33.

More<sup>4</sup>
Lucius Sergius Catiline was born in the year 108 B.C.,<sup>1</sup> of a patrician family. While still a young man he was a partisan<sup>2</sup> of Sulla, and had a hand in<sup>3</sup> the proscriptions of that time. It is said,<sup>4</sup> too, that he murdered his own<sup>5</sup> son, and that he committed many other crimes in private life.<sup>6</sup> These<sup>7</sup> stories the two Ciceros, Marcus and Quintus, willingly circulated, and they did not<sup>8</sup> hesitate to blacken his character<sup>9</sup> as much as possible. Indeed,<sup>10</sup> Quintus took pains to<sup>11</sup> publish evil reports about Catiline at the time his brother was running for<sup>12</sup> the consulship, hoping<sup>13</sup> that in this way he would aid him and injure Catiline.

<sup>1</sup> The consuls of this year were Ser. Sulpicius Galba and M. Aurelius Scaurus. If the full names are used, omit connective.

<sup>4</sup> Use verb personally; B. 332; A. 582; G. 528; H. 611.

<sup>5</sup> Express 'own' by the position of the pronoun.

<sup>8</sup> Unite the negative with the connective; B. 341. 1. d and 2. d; A. 328; G. 480; H. 656. 4 and 5.

<sup>9</sup> mōrēs infāmēs facere; infinitive or quīn-clause? Cf. Intro. 87.

<sup>13</sup> The nominative of the present participle is to be sparingly used; A. 492. n.; cf. G. 585. r.; H. 640. 5.

EXERCISE 34.

But even Catiline's enemies are forced to admit that he was not altogether bad. He was a good speaker and a person<sup>1</sup> of great physical<sup>2</sup> strength, enduring<sup>3</sup> hunger, cold, and<sup>4</sup> loss of sleep<sup>5</sup> marvelously well.<sup>6</sup> Moreover, he knew all the ways of approaching<sup>7</sup> men, and was able to retain their friendship; in fact,<sup>8</sup> Cicero himself says that he once thought him a good citizen. Being by nature ambitious,<sup>9</sup> Catiline early sought public office. In 68<sup>10</sup> he was praetor,<sup>11</sup> and, in the following year, governor of<sup>12</sup> Africa. On returning to Rome in 66<sup>13</sup> he learned that ambassadors had preceded him to complain about his actions<sup>14</sup> in Africa — a thing<sup>15</sup> which prevented him from standing for<sup>16</sup> the consulship that year.

<sup>1</sup> Omit.

<sup>4</sup> Three or more coördinate words or phrases most often have simply -que with the last.

EXERCISE 35.

To be sure, he had arrived too late to<sup>1</sup> be a candidate<sup>2</sup> at the regular election, even had the Africans entered no complaint.<sup>3</sup> But the consuls elect, Sulla and Autronius, were convicted of bribery,<sup>4</sup> and so a new<sup>5</sup> election was held. It was<sup>6</sup> at this that<sup>6</sup> Catiline hoped to be a candidate. Disappointed in this<sup>7</sup> hope,<sup>8</sup> he made a plan with Autronius, Gnaeus Piso, and<sup>9</sup> certain others to murder, on January 1, Torquatus and Cotta, who were declared consuls at this last election, and who would<sup>10</sup> enter upon the duties of office<sup>11</sup> on that date.<sup>12</sup> The conspiracy was discovered, and the plan was postponed until February 5, when not only the consuls, but many of the senators were to be killed.<sup>13</sup>

<sup>12</sup> diēs.

EXERCISE 36.

Cicero says that on the appointed day the conspirators began <sup>1</sup> to gather, but that Catiline gave the signal before everything was ready. There are some, however, who think that Caesar was the one <sup>2</sup> appointed <sup>3</sup> to give the signal, and that he would have done so, had he not noticed that Crassus was missing. Whether Catiline gave the signal too soon, or whether Caesar feared to give <sup>4</sup> it <sup>5</sup> because of the absence of Crassus, <sup>6</sup> is very uncertain. <sup>7</sup> But at any rate <sup>8</sup> this plan, which <sup>9</sup> Cicero calls "the earlier conspiracy," was unsuccessful. Meanwhile Catiline's trial for extortion had not yet taken place <sup>10</sup>—a circumstance <sup>11</sup> which prevented his standing for the consulship in 65, <sup>12</sup> just <sup>13</sup> as it had done <sup>14</sup> the year before.

It is worth<sup>1</sup> noting that, though Catiline was beyond doubt guilty, Cicero was undecided<sup>2</sup> whether or not<sup>3</sup> to undertake his defence<sup>4</sup> on the charge of extortion. Either<sup>5</sup> at that time he did not realize what sort of man Catiline was, or he was willing to defend him in order to<sup>6</sup> secure his support<sup>7</sup>; yet it cannot be proved that he did undertake the case.<sup>8</sup> However, Catiline was acquitted, and both he and Cicero were candidates for the consulship in the year 64.<sup>9</sup> About June 1 Catiline began to sound<sup>10</sup> men individually, and a little later brought together all those whom he thought ripe for<sup>11</sup> revolution. When these had assembled, he delivered a speech<sup>12</sup> in which he tried to persuade them that,<sup>13</sup> if he should be elected<sup>14</sup> consul, he would carry things with a high hand<sup>15</sup> and confer many benefits upon them.

He further assured them that his plans would be supported<sup>1</sup> by Gnaeus Piso in Spain and by Publius Sittius Nucerinus in Africa, and that he hoped to have as his colleague Gaius Antonius, a man in sympathy with<sup>2</sup> his designs and deeply in<sup>3</sup> debt. When the speech was finished, they all promised to work hard for<sup>4</sup> Catiline's election, and swore that they would not divulge what they had heard; it is even said<sup>5</sup> that, in order to make the oath more binding,<sup>6</sup> they partook of<sup>7</sup> blood mingled with wine. Quintus Curius, one of the conspirators, could not, however, control his tongue, but<sup>8</sup> disclosed all to his mistress, Fulvia. Through her<sup>9</sup> the matter came to Cicero's ears,<sup>10</sup> and great fear fell upon<sup>11</sup> all good citizens.

EXERCISE 39.

As a result of<sup>1</sup> this report a more stringent<sup>2</sup> law against<sup>3</sup> bribery was proposed,<sup>4</sup> so that Catiline might not dare to buy votes. Shortly before the election, along with others, Cicero advocated<sup>5</sup> this law in a speech called In Togā Candidā. The greater part of this is lost, but we learn from Asconius, who has preserved some fragments,<sup>6</sup> that in it Cicero assailed Catiline and Antonius bitterly, and that they replied in like strain,<sup>7</sup> calling attention<sup>8</sup> to the fact<sup>9</sup> that he was a novus homō. The nobles, it is true, for this very reason<sup>10</sup> had little sympathy with Cicero, but they were afraid of Catiline. So, when the election was held, Cicero was declared consul unanimously,<sup>11</sup> his colleague however being Antonius, the above-mentioned<sup>12</sup> friend of Catiline.

EXERCISE 40.

From Catiline's defeat<sup>1</sup> we can judge<sup>2</sup> how greatly he was feared; for it is said that both Caesar and Crassus worked hard for his election. And though the conspiracy was for the time being checked, the danger was still imminent,<sup>3</sup> because one of the consuls for the coming year<sup>4</sup> was in sympathy with the conspirators. But Antonius was persuaded by Cicero to spare<sup>5</sup> the state on condition that<sup>6</sup> he should have as<sup>7</sup> his<sup>7</sup> province Macedonia, which the lot had assigned<sup>8</sup> to Cicero himself; for Antonius was anxious to gain wealth, and Macedonia was a rich province. In exchange for<sup>9</sup> it Cicero received Antonius' province of Cisalpine Gaul; but even this he did not<sup>10</sup> retain, giving it over subsequently<sup>11</sup> to Metellus Celer because, as he said,<sup>12</sup> he did not wish to leave Rome at the end of his consulship.

In 63<sup>1</sup> Catiline's opponents brought him to trial on a charge of murder,<sup>2</sup> which he was said<sup>3</sup> to have committed in the times of Sulla. But he was acquitted, and, being not at all discouraged by previous failures,<sup>4</sup> decided to run for the consulship again this year. If elected, he purposed as<sup>5</sup> consul elect to fulfil at once the promises<sup>6</sup> made to the conspirators, hoping<sup>7</sup> to be able<sup>8</sup> to persuade Antonius that it was to his advantage<sup>9</sup> to disregard the pledge<sup>10</sup> given to Cicero and to aid his former friends. But it seems that that consul, now that he had been given Macedonia, had little sympathy<sup>11</sup> with the conspiracy; so that<sup>12</sup> Catiline's hope was probably<sup>13</sup> groundless.<sup>14</sup> Meanwhile, Cicero was kept informed of all his plans, and protected his own life with a guard of friends and clients.

Though Cicero had as yet no direct evidence against<sup>1</sup> the conspirators, he thought the danger so grave that he induced the senate to postpone the election, and to meet on that day to consider the situation<sup>2</sup> more<sup>3</sup> carefully. When the sénate was convened at that time, Cicero addressed Catiline, bidding him clear<sup>4</sup> himself if he could. He, as usual unabashed,<sup>5</sup> proclaimed that he was the leader of the popular party, and that he would not<sup>6</sup> fail the people if they needed his services. The senate, though startled, did not pass a severe decree, despite the fact that,<sup>7</sup> a few days before, when Cato threatened Catiline with a lawsuit,<sup>8</sup> the latter had declared that they<sup>9</sup> would rue it, if he were in any way<sup>10</sup> injured.

Meanwhile Manlius, an ally of Catiline, had gone to Faesulae in Etruria,<sup>1</sup> and was there gathering an army to aid him. It was now arranged<sup>2</sup> that Manlius should make an armed demonstration<sup>3</sup> on October 27, while<sup>4</sup> at Rome Catiline should kill his competitors and Cicero on election day,<sup>5</sup> in case he was not chosen consul. A rumor about the doings<sup>6</sup> in Etruria became current<sup>7</sup> in the city, and many citizens received anonymous<sup>8</sup> letters warning them to flee to the country. So when, on October 21, Cicero arose in the senate and announced what would take place<sup>9</sup> in a few days, the dēcrētum ultimum was passed, enjoining it<sup>10</sup> upon the consuls to see that the state suffered no injury.

On the day of the election,<sup>1</sup> Cicero went down to the Campus Martius wearing<sup>2</sup> a coat of mail<sup>3</sup> under his toga. This he did, not because<sup>4</sup> he thought that it would protect him, but because he wished all good citizens to realize the danger. Silanus and Murena were elected consuls, and Catiline found it impossible<sup>5</sup> to carry out his plan. Manlius, however, made a demonstration on the appointed day, and it was announced that forces were gathering in other parts of Italy, and that slaves were rising.<sup>6</sup> The senate, fearing<sup>7</sup> that the towns of Italy would not be able to check the disorder,<sup>8</sup> sent officers and forces to various points, promising rewards to those who should give information<sup>9</sup> about the conspiracy.

But though the conspirators were so many,<sup>1</sup> no one could be induced<sup>2</sup> to give information to the senate. Meanwhile Catiline still lingered in the city; and, in order to lessen suspicion,<sup>3</sup> he offered<sup>4</sup> to take up his residence<sup>5</sup> at the house of some prominent citizen, where he could be watched. Cicero refused to receive him, because, as he said,<sup>6</sup> he did not feel<sup>7</sup> safe while they were within the same city walls, to say nothing of<sup>8</sup> being<sup>9</sup> in the same house.<sup>10</sup> Others also refused, and it is probable that no one would have received him, had he not gone finally to Marcus Marcellus, a good friend<sup>11</sup> of his. At about this time word arrived that Praeneste had been attacked on November 1, but that the guards stationed by Cicero had protected it.

On the night<sup>1</sup> of November 6, Catiline slipped away from<sup>2</sup> the house of Marcus Marcellus to meet with the other<sup>3</sup> conspirators at the home of Marcus Laeca. Catiline was almost ready<sup>4</sup> to leave the city and join Manlius, and so there was much business to be transacted at this meeting; and, most<sup>5</sup> important of all,<sup>6</sup> since Catiline said that he was unwilling to leave the city while Cicero was alive,<sup>7</sup> two Roman knights, Gaius Cornelius and Lucius Vargunteius, agreed to call upon Cicero at early dawn and, when admitted to greet him, to kill him in his bed. The meeting, it seems,<sup>8</sup> broke up too late for<sup>9</sup> them to carry out the plan that night, and it was accordingly postponed until<sup>10</sup> the following night.

Cicero says that the meeting was hardly dismissed when the news was carried to him. Thinking<sup>1</sup> that the peril was great, he surrounded his house with stronger<sup>2</sup> guards, and informed many prominent citizens what the names of the two conspirators were, and at what time they would come<sup>3</sup> to his house. When the men arrived, they found closed doors; and, after they had gone away in anger,<sup>4</sup> Cicero convened<sup>5</sup> the senate in<sup>6</sup> the temple<sup>7</sup> of Jupiter Stator. Thither<sup>8</sup> Catiline ventured to come, though he realized that his plans were discovered, and though Lucius Paulus had threatened to bring him to trial<sup>9</sup> for sedition.<sup>10</sup>

As<sup>1</sup> he was taking his seat,<sup>2</sup> the other senators did not hesitate to show their fear by leaving the nearest benches empty. Then Cicero arose and delivered against him a speech which was afterward written out and preserved. At its close<sup>3</sup> Catiline tried to reply, but the senators shouted "traitor"<sup>4</sup> and "murderer," and he rushed forth from the senate house, leaving the city that very night. As he journeyed<sup>5</sup> he sent back letters to influential men, to the effect<sup>6</sup> that he was going into exile at Marseilles,<sup>7</sup> that he had done no wrong,<sup>8</sup> and that he would not<sup>9</sup> have gone, had he not feared that the commonwealth would suffer some harm<sup>10</sup> if he stood his ground.<sup>11</sup>

As soon as Cicero learned that Catiline had left the city, he sent messengers to warn the municipalities that<sup>1</sup> the latter had taken up arms. On the next day he assembled the citizens at Rome, telling them that the man they had so greatly feared had departed at last. Though Catiline had written to many prominent men that he was going into exile, there was no one who did not doubt the truth of this.<sup>2</sup> For Quintus Catulus read in the senate a letter of very different purport,<sup>3</sup> which he said had been sent to him by Catiline, to the effect<sup>4</sup> that he (Catiline) had been forced to take up arms, because he had not been allowed to have in the state the honors which he deserved.<sup>5</sup>

Meanwhile ambassadors of the Allobroges came to town, sent, as they said, because their citizens were being injured by Romans. Thinking<sup>1</sup> that these Gauls would be very<sup>2</sup> useful allies if they could be persuaded to assist the conspirators, Lentulus sent Publius Umbrenus, who was a freedman and had once<sup>3</sup> been a trader<sup>4</sup> in Gaul, to interview<sup>5</sup> them. The Gauls were easily persuaded that it was to their interest to cast in their lot with<sup>6</sup> Lentulus, and Umbrenus then conducted them to the house<sup>7</sup> of Decimus Brutus, who happened<sup>8</sup> to be away from the city at that time, and whose wife Sempronia was in sympathy with the conspirators. When the Allobroges heard the names of many prominent citizens whom Gabinius mentioned as<sup>1</sup> implicated<sup>2</sup> in the conspiracy, they promised to help, and were dismissed. But the conspirators made a great mistake<sup>3</sup> in<sup>4</sup> trusting them; for, after hesitating long whether to do<sup>5</sup> what they had promised or to disclose the matter, they finally told all to their patron Quintus Fabius Sanga, and he lost no time<sup>6</sup> in reporting what he had heard<sup>7</sup> to Cicero. The latter, feeling<sup>8</sup> that at last he had the opportunity for which he had long been waiting, urged the Gauls to approach as many as possible,<sup>9</sup> pretending<sup>10</sup> that they were friends, and to secure a sworn statement<sup>11</sup> from them. Lentulus, Cethegus, and<sup>1</sup> Statilius were easily persuaded to give them letters to take back to their own countrymen to the effect<sup>2</sup> that they<sup>3</sup> would perform what they had promised the ambassadors. In the same letters they assured the Gauls that there was plenty of infantry in Italy, and directed them to see to it<sup>4</sup> that cavalry be not lacking. It seems that<sup>5</sup> Lucius Cassius suspected treachery on the part<sup>2</sup> of the ambassadors; at any rate<sup>6</sup> he declined to give a sworn statement, saying that<sup>7</sup> he would soon visit<sup>8</sup> their people in Gaul, and left the city a few days before they were ready to start.<sup>9</sup> Meanwhile it had been arranged that Titus Volturcius of Crotona<sup>10</sup> should go with the ambassadors and conduct them to Catiline, so that they might make a compact<sup>11</sup> with him on the way home.<sup>12</sup>

thing which Cicero had hoped he would do. Accordingly the latter ordered that, on the night<sup>3</sup> of December 2, the praetors Lucius Flaccus and Gaius
Pomptinus should lie in wait<sup>4</sup> with armed men near<sup>5</sup> the Mulvian bridge. And when the ambassadors and Volturcius began<sup>6</sup> to cross, these<sup>7</sup> made a sudden attack. The Allobroges, suspecting that it had been done by Cicero's order, at once surrendered; but Volturcius wished to fight, until he found himself alone.<sup>8</sup>
Then he too surrendered, and the letters were seized by the praetors. This happened at about the end of<sup>9</sup>
the third watch, and as day was breaking, the men

As soon as the men arrived, Cicero summoned to him Gabinius, Statilius, Cethegus, Lentulus, and Caeparius. These all, suspecting nothing, came one by one,<sup>1</sup> excepting<sup>2</sup> Caeparius. Apparently<sup>3</sup> he had heard what had happened, for he tried to escape; but he was intercepted and brought back. Meanwhile, as the news spread,<sup>4</sup> prominent citizens hastened to Cicero's house and tried to persuade him to open the letters at once, so that he might not call the senate together and<sup>5</sup> disturb the city unless there were some<sup>6</sup> need.<sup>7</sup> He, however, said that he would not<sup>8</sup> break the seals<sup>9</sup> until the senate had convened, well<sup>10</sup> knowing what the letters contained.<sup>11</sup> There are some, however, who think he did this<sup>12</sup> in order to make a greater show.<sup>13</sup>

While<sup>1</sup> the senate was gathering, Gaius Sulpicius was sent by Cicero, on the suggestion<sup>2</sup> of the Allobroges, to see whether<sup>3</sup> there were any<sup>4</sup> weapons in the house of Cethegus. He found a great number there — a thing which made the guilt<sup>5</sup> of the conspirators all the clearer. Meanwhile the senate had convened in<sup>6</sup> the temple of Concord, and thither came Cicero, personally<sup>7</sup> leading Lentulus, because he was still praetor, the other conspirators being brought under guard.<sup>8</sup> Volturcius was the first witness brought in; and when he had been allowed to turn state's evidence,<sup>9</sup> he declared that he had been sent with a letter to Catiline, and that, with the help of the latter,<sup>10</sup> the conspirators had hoped to destroy Rome and kill many of the citizens.

Though the Allobroges had been among<sup>1</sup> the conspirators but<sup>2</sup> a few days, they were able to disclose much, — that Lentulus and the others had hoped that horsemen would be sent from Gaul, that Lentulus believed that he was the third Cornelius who should rule over the Romans, and that Cethegus had wanted to burn and murder<sup>3</sup> at once, without waiting<sup>4</sup> for the Saturnalia. When the letters were brought out, the conspirators at first attempted to deny all, and Lentulus actually<sup>5</sup> asked the ambassadors what business he had ever had<sup>6</sup> with them. ## EXERCISE 58.

In order that no one<sup>1</sup> might thereafter be able to claim that the evidence was not faithfully<sup>2</sup> transcribed in<sup>3</sup> the public records, Cicero had arranged that all the words of the witnesses, the questions<sup>4</sup> and answers, should be taken down<sup>5</sup> by certain senators, men of known integrity,<sup>6</sup> who, because of their memory, knowledge, and speed in<sup>7</sup> writing, could most easily follow<sup>8</sup> what was said. | These public records he later ordered copied, and distributed them over all<sup>9</sup> Italy, even sending them to every province, because, he says, he desired that no one should fail to know<sup>10</sup> of this evidence from which salvation had been secured<sup>11</sup> for the state. He claims that there was no place on earth where the name of Rome was<sup>12</sup> known, to which this evidence did not go.<sup>13</sup>

After the evidence had been taken down, the senate thanked<sup>1</sup> Cicero, Flaccus, and Pomptinus, decreeing that, when Lentulus had laid down his praetorship,<sup>2</sup> he and the other conspirators should be put under arrest.<sup>3</sup> This decree applied as well to<sup>4</sup> several individuals<sup>5</sup> who were not present. On this occasion a thanksgiving also was voted in Cicero's name<sup>6</sup>—an honor which he says had never before fallen<sup>7</sup> to any but a warrior,<sup>8</sup> and which he claims had hitherto been granted because the interests of the state had been furthered,<sup>9</sup> but now because the state itself had been preserved. When this business was transacted, the senators were dismissed, and Cicero, going outdoors,<sup>10</sup> addressed the people, keeping them until evening as he related what had just taken place within.

EXERCISE 60.

The senate met again on the following day, and liberal<sup>1</sup> rewards were given the Allobroges. On returning from the senate meeting,<sup>2</sup> it seems that Cicero was received at<sup>3</sup> the house of a friend, because the rites of the Bona Dea were taking place at his own. And there is a story<sup>4</sup> to the effect<sup>5</sup> that when the ashes<sup>6</sup> were nearly dead, a sudden flame shot up on<sup>7</sup> the altar of the goddess, and that when this occurrence<sup>8</sup> was reported by Terentia to Cicero, he immediately accepted it as a good<sup>9</sup> omen. Though the story may not be true, it is nevertheless clear that, now that he had the conspirators in his power, Cicero was hesitating what to do next, and that during this night his courage was somehow<sup>10</sup> strengthened. For in the morning he had decided to inflict the severest<sup>11</sup> penalty.

Meanwhile Lentulus and the other conspirators were in the custody of<sup>1</sup> individual senators, and it is worth<sup>2</sup> mentioning that it was<sup>3</sup> Statilius who had been committed to Caesar. It is probable<sup>4</sup> that a different arrangement would have been made,<sup>5</sup> if Cicero had not suspected that Caesar was in sympathy with the conspiracy. Apparently<sup>6</sup> he was unwilling to put Lentulus or Cethegus in his charge,<sup>7</sup> fearing that he would not keep guard carefully. At this same time friends of the conspirators tried to gather a band<sup>8</sup> of slaves and workmen to rescue them by force. When Cicero learned of this,<sup>9</sup> he at once stationed guards—a thing which perhaps he ought to have done<sup>10</sup> beforehand.

EXERCISE 62.

On December 5 the senate met to consider what punishment was to be inflicted upon the conspirators,<sup>1</sup> and Decimus Junius Silanus, consul elect, was first<sup>2</sup> asked his opinion.<sup>3</sup> He declared that he thought the men deserved<sup>4</sup> the severest punishment, meaning thereby<sup>5</sup> that they ought to be executed. Though many assented to this view,<sup>6</sup> Nero urged<sup>7</sup> that no action be taken<sup>8</sup> on that day, because, as he said, there was not sufficient force at hand<sup>9</sup> to carry out the senate's decrees. Then Julius Caesar arose and warned the senators that<sup>10</sup> they could not lawfully<sup>11</sup> put Roman citizens to death without a trial,<sup>12</sup> as Silanus had proposed, reminding<sup>13</sup> them that their ancestors had allowed even condemned criminals<sup>14</sup> to go into exile, if they chose.<sup>15</sup>

EXERCISE 63.

He also<sup>1</sup> argued that exile was a severer punishment than death; for, he said,<sup>2</sup> death brings an end of misery. Finally, he declared that, if Cicero and the senate should put the conspirators to death without a trial, they would regret it later; that there was no danger while men like Cicero held the consulship, but that at some time, with this precedent,<sup>3</sup> an unprincipled consul might<sup>4</sup> renew the proscriptions of Sulla. He therefore proposed that<sup>5</sup> the goods of the conspirators be confiscated and that the men should be guarded in various cities throughout<sup>6</sup> Italy. This speech produced a marked effect,<sup>7</sup> and Silanus tried to explain that by saying<sup>8</sup> that the men deserved the severest punishment, he did not mean<sup>9</sup> that they should be executed.

EXERCISE 64.

Even<sup>1</sup> Quintus Cicerō began to fear that his brother Marcus might not be able to carry through<sup>2</sup> his plan. And it seems that he was alarmed for his brother's safety; at any rate, when the latter arose, he mentioned early<sup>3</sup> in his speech the dejection<sup>4</sup> of Quintus. Though Cicero tried to speak in such a way that it would be thought that he did not care<sup>5</sup> which<sup>6</sup> punishment the senators chose,<sup>7</sup> still it is clear<sup>8</sup> that he wished the conspirators to be executed. And it is likely<sup>9</sup> that he would have spoken more freely,<sup>10</sup> if Caesar and others had been in sympathy with his view.<sup>11</sup> The senate was not persuaded by this speech that they ought to execute the conspirators; but after Cato had spoken, they no longer had any<sup>12</sup> doubt<sup>13</sup> on that point.

EXERCISE 65.

Cato warned the senate that the danger was great, and that there was need of energetic action,<sup>1</sup> pointing out<sup>2</sup> that many citizens had in former days<sup>3</sup> been put to death without a trial by their peers.<sup>4</sup> So he advised that the extreme punishment be inflicted<sup>5</sup> at once, and the majority<sup>6</sup> of the senators assented<sup>7</sup> to his view. When the decree had once been passed, Cicero allowed no night to intervene, but conducted the conspirators immediately to the Tullianum, where they were let down one by one and strangled.<sup>8</sup> When he came forth he uttered but a single phrase<sup>9</sup> to the people, "They have been," meaning thereby that the conspirators were dead. Then there was great rejoicing throughout the whole city because, it was thought, all danger was now dispelled.

EXERCISE 66.

At about this same time a certain Lucius Tarquinius was brought into the senate, claiming<sup>1</sup> that he had been sent by Crassus to encourage Catiline, and to tell<sup>2</sup> him not to be downcast<sup>3</sup> because the other conspirators had been caught. There were some who thought that Cicero had instigated<sup>4</sup> Tarquinius to tell this story,<sup>5</sup> in order that Crassus might not dare to defend the arrested<sup>6</sup> conspirators. Others believed that the whole thing<sup>7</sup> was devised by Autronius, a friend of Catiline, that Crassus, being in<sup>8</sup> like danger, might more readily help the others who were charged<sup>9</sup> with implication in the conspiracy. Sallust states that Crassus complained in his hearing<sup>10</sup> that it was Cicero who had subjected<sup>11</sup> him to this insult.

EXERCISE 67.

Whether Crassus sent Tarquinius or not<sup>1</sup> is uncertain, but it seems that many at this time suspected that he was in sympathy with the conspirators. And though he and Caesar reported facts<sup>2</sup> about the conspiracy to Cicero, trying in this way to show that they were loyal<sup>3</sup> to the state, it is by no means certain<sup>4</sup> that they would not have been glad to<sup>5</sup> reap the benefits,<sup>6</sup> if Catiline's plans had turned out well. Some believed that, by the speech which he delivered<sup>7</sup> in the senate, Caesar was trying to help his former allies whom he had deserted. Indeed,<sup>8</sup> as he left the temple of Concord on that day, certain knights, who were on guard, threatened him with their swords.

EXERCISE 68.

Later Caesar was brought to trial, being accused by Quintus Curius and Lucius Vettius of having been<sup>1</sup> in the conspiracy. But he managed<sup>2</sup> to escape; for Cicero was persuaded to testify<sup>3</sup> that he had brought him information about the conspiracy—a thing which seemed to show that he<sup>4</sup> was not a friend of Catiline. At about this time many others were tried, and some of them went into exile. In fact, some years later, when Cicero was himself exiled,<sup>5</sup> he feared to go to Athens because, as he says, some of these men were still living there. He therefore proceeded to Thessalonica, where he remained for several months, and then came back to Epirus.

EXERCISE 69.

To return<sup>1</sup> to Catiline, he had united his forces with those<sup>2</sup> of Manlius, and was adding any others he could secure. Though the army was a small one, still he declined<sup>3</sup> to accept slaves; fearing that it might seem that in his choice<sup>4</sup> of soldiers he was not discriminating<sup>5</sup> enough. About one-fourth of the men had regular<sup>6</sup> arms, the others being supplied with spears, sharpened stakes, and other similar weapons. With this army he must oppose<sup>7</sup> either the consul Antonius, who was now in Etruria, or Metellus Celer the praetor, who was beyond the Apennines. While waiting for news from Rome, he avoided meeting either<sup>8</sup> of these; and when he learned what had happened there, his first design was<sup>9</sup> to cross the mountains and flee into Gaul.

Finding that Metellus Celer had anticipated<sup>1</sup> his plan and had encamped at the foot<sup>2</sup> of the mountains to cut him off, he decided to fight Antonius, thinking that he, being an old<sup>3</sup> ally, would perhaps not try to crush him. But Antonius gave it out<sup>4</sup> that he was lame,<sup>5</sup> and put in command of his troops Marcus Petreius, a tried<sup>6</sup> soldier. A fierce battle took place<sup>7</sup> near Pistoria; but the result<sup>8</sup> was certain from the beginning. When Catiline saw his forces scattered, he plunged in among the thickest of the enemy, and died far from his troops. The latter fought bravely, falling in their places<sup>9</sup> with wounds in front<sup>10</sup>; and though we may not approve their designs, still we cannot but<sup>11</sup> admire their courage.

EXERCISE 71.

Not only did Catiline's soldiers fight bravely, but there were some who said that out of<sup>1</sup> all his forces no freeborn<sup>2</sup> citizen was taken alive.<sup>3</sup> And Petreius won his victory<sup>4</sup> by no means easily; indeed, it is reported that all the most energetic<sup>5</sup> of his soldiers either fell in battle or received serious<sup>6</sup> wounds. After the fight was over,<sup>7</sup> the body of Catiline was found where the strife had been fiercest,<sup>8</sup> and there is a story<sup>9</sup> that Antonius had<sup>10</sup> his head cut off and sent it to the officials at Rome. It was in the year 62<sup>11</sup> that this battle took place, and with it the war ended;<sup>12</sup> for the remnants of Catiline's forces scattered in various directions, and there was no further armed resistance.<sup>13</sup>

EXERCISE 72.

Meanwhile at Rome, as I have above mentioned, many were charged with being implicated<sup>1</sup> in the conspiracy, and some of them went into exile. But there still remained<sup>2</sup> in the city a disorderly element<sup>3</sup> which Cicero regarded<sup>4</sup> as in sympathy with Catiline's plans. In his speeches subsequently<sup>5</sup> delivered he oftens refers to<sup>6</sup> them, using<sup>7</sup> the same designations<sup>8</sup> once applied to Catiline and his allies. As a matter of fact,<sup>9</sup> this very element showed hostility<sup>10</sup> to Cicero a little later when Clodius came forward<sup>11</sup> as its leader. Whether or not<sup>12</sup> Catiline's conspiracy was very dangerous<sup>13</sup> is a question<sup>14</sup> still undecided<sup>15</sup>; but Cicero did not hesitate everywhere<sup>16</sup> to claim that, in<sup>17</sup> suppressing it, he had saved the state.

A Latin Grammar.

By Professor CHARLES E. BENNETT, Cornell University. 12mo, cloth, 282 pages. Price, 80 cents.

IN this book the essential facts of Latin Grammar are presented within the smallest compass consistent with high scholarly standards. It covers not only the work of the preparatory school, but also that of the required courses in college and university. By omitting rare forms and syntactical usages found only in ante-classical and post-classical Latin, and by relegating to an Appendix theoretical and historical questions, it has been found possible to treat the subject with entire adequacy in the compass of 250 pages exclusive of Indexes. In the German schools, books of this scope fully meet the exacting demands of the entire gymnasial course, and the host of teachers who have tried Bennett's Grammar find that they are materially helped by the absence of the mass of useless and irrelevant matter which forms the bulk of the older grammars.

Appendix to Bennett's Latin Grammar.

For university work. 12mo, cloth, 246 pages. Price, 80 cents.

THE purpose of this book is to give such information regarding the history and development of the Latin language as experience has shown to be of service to advanced students.

The subjects treated are the Latin Alphabet, Pronunciation, Hidden Quantity, Accent, Orthography, The Latin Sounds, Inflections, Adverbs and Prepositions, and Syntax. Of these subjects, those of Hidden Quantity, Inflections, and Syntax receive special attention; and the results of recent investigation are set forth fully and clearly, but in compact form.
